THE PRIEST AND THE QUAKER. BY HORACE BROADBRIM.

Not long ago, a Pharisaic fop, Who from the widow's mite obtained his bread; Who gained, by prayer, of fame a goodly crop, And many a dainty place to lay his head, Met in a coach, a troop of damsels fair, And of their wealth resolved t' obtain a share.

Their costumes did all rustic wealth exceed, All gorgeous gems were with their beauty blended; 'Twas plain their rule of life was fashion's ereed; Diamonds and gold were round their necks suspended; Bedecked with wreaths and twining beads so finely, Blended with rosy smiles, they looked divinely.

This godly fop sat eyeing them awhile. Scanning their pretty persons o'er and o'er— Thinking how many things the heart beguile, But drinking draughts of love and beauty more At length his lips the sombre silence broke, And thus to the unrighteous fair he spoke:—

"Beloved," said he, "you'll pardon what I say, Since with my words I mean not to effend; The Lord hath sent me here to beg and pray, And all my acts to his good glory tend; Of money I must make accumulation— Of Heathen souls to purchase the salvation. "The early Christians gave all to the Lord, Save just enough to buy their daily bread; Much less than this I wish you to afford—Your rings and gems and wreaths that erown your head For these I promise you eternal rest—And many a Heathen soul will hence be blest.

"Nine pence alone, tis said, will save one soul; And hence the finery which your persons wear Might pay to Heaven full many a sinner's toll, And you yourselves to Jesus Christ endear;

Yet, while you love the vanities of earth, You cannot hope to obtain a heavenly birth." He ended-and the ladies all in tears, With penitence and sorrow much impressed -Hating to part with fashion's needful gears, And loth as much to lose eternal rest -They looked upon their gems with deep contrition; Yield them they must, or sink into perdition!

While halting thus between these two opinions, A Quaker, who the while had silent sat,
Watching this chief of Pharisaic minions,
Who eyed their jewels like a mousing cat;
"Friend," he exclaimed, "thou hast a watch—I pray
That thou wouldst kindly name the time of day."

"Most cheerfully," replied the godly man—
And drew a watch most richly fraught in gold;
"Now," said the Quaker, "tell me, if you can,
The cost of that, and think me not too bold."
"The whole," said he, "with seal and chain, at most,
The sum of twice one hundred dollars cost."

" Friend," said the Quaker, "then you must confess Yourself a vile and hardened wretch indeed-The cost of this, thy pride, would thousands bless, According to thy own acknowledged creed; Cast out the beam from thy own sinful eye, Before thou seek'st thy neighbor's faults to spy,'

EVENING .- BY THE REV. GEORGE CROLY. When eve is purpling cliff and cave, Thoughts of the heart, how soft ye flow! Not softer on the Western wave The golden lines of sunset glow. Then all by fate or chance removed,

Like spirits crowd upon the eye;
The few we liked—the one we loved!
And the whole heart is memory. And life is like a fading flower, Its beauty dying as we gaze; Yet as the shadows round us lower, Heaven pours above a brighter biaze.

When morning sheds its gorgeous dye, Our hope, our heart, to earth is given; But dark and lonely is the eye, That turns not, at its eve, to Heaven!

OF Lord Mahon, in his history of England, just published, gives the following not very flattering description

"In Queen Anne's reign, the place of daily reports of the debates was, in a great measure, supplied by frequent party pamphlets. It was through these that the people were sometimes instructed and restrained, and more often spurred and goaded, in the politics of the day. Never before had England seen this paper warfare waged with such fierce and deadly rancor. Never before had it been conducted by such eminent abilities. On the one side, the whigs could boast of the graceful and easy style, the in-imitable humor, and fertile fancy of Addison; of the buoyant spirit, the keen and biting vehemence of Steele. On the other side, the tories possessed in Swift, perhaps the greatest master of satire that ever lived. He was bold, vindictive, and unscrupulous. He was seldom restrained either by delicacy or compassion. He had a thorough knowledge of all the baser parts of human nature-for they were his own. If, indeed, it be possible that an accomplished satirist should ever be an amiable man, Swift, at least, was not that prodigy; and his life and character appear consumed by the same fiery rancor which glows in his writings. We find him bred, as a whig, under Sir William Temple-patronised, as a whig, by Lord Somers -boasting of himself as a whig in his writings-and then, without a pretence of principle, without the *lightest charge against his friends on public grounds, and merely on an allegation of personal neglect, turning round to the tory leaders at the very moment when those leaders were coming into office, and having evidently no better reason for deserting his cause than that he thought it in danger. We find him instantly single out all his former friends for his libels, and assail them with all the deadly resentment of a renegade. The illustrious Somers, for example, his early friend, so lately held up as 'the modern Aristides,' becomes 'a false, deceitful rascal.' We find him, in some cases, even making a boast of insincerity; and thus saying of Lord Rochester, 'Though I said I only talked from my love to him, I told a fie, for I do not care if he were hanged.' We find him now urge his greedy claims for reward upon both Bolingbroke and Harley; and at length, of the people." in the spring of 1713, extort the deanery of St. Patrick's from a reluctant Queen and hollow friends. We find him, a beneficed c'ergyman, indite a sarcastic allegory on the principal sects of Christianity; we find him indulge in the grossest and most unsecully allusions, even when writing to a young, an unmarried, and a virtuous woman, who had become attached to him-a woman whom his cold-hearted cruelty afterwards hurried to an early grave. Such is my opinion of his character. I turn to his writings, and my contempt for the man is at once lost in my admiration of the author. What vigor and vivacity of style! How rich is his variety of illustration, how terrible his energy of invec-tive! How powerfully does he cast aside to the right and to the left all extraneous or subordinate topics—grapple at once with the main matters at issue—and give battle to the wholestrength of his opponents! Though nearly all written as mere occasional pieces, and to serve on. ten as mere occasional pieces, and to serve an immediate object, his works have been deservedly classed by posterity as permanent productions, and display more, perhaps, than any other, the whole force of plain and homely language.

" In the state of things at present existing in this country, my personal wishes are, to withdraw my name from the place it occupies before the public."

Daniel Werster.

" A vote of the Senate of the United States has attached to my name a disgrace which I am fully convinced no time or no efforts of mine will ever be able to efface."—Extract from Gen. Harrison's Letter dated July 16, 1816. See Niles' Reg., Vol. 10, page 424.

S. G. Goodrich,-We observed this name at the bottom of the address of the recent Whig State Convention at Worcester; and, from certain other indications, we perceive that this maker of children's annuals, and "patcher up of books and papers into multifarious shapes," as he was happily termed by the American Monthly Magazine, is thrusting his hungry visage into the political arena. It may not be amiss to forewarn the voters of the ninth District, that this quondam publisher and quasi author, is seriously intending to get foisted, at some future period, with a nomination for Congress. Think of that! Peter Parley in Congress! The whole conduct of the man betrays this intention, no less than the mean subterfuges to which himself and his coadjutors are now resorting, for the purpose of defeating the election of Mr A. H. EVERETT. We understand that their plan is to print Mr Everett's former speeches and reports, altered, probably, to suit their purposes, and distribute them through the district. But the voters of old Norfolk are too wise to be guiled by such miserable arts. They can only excite the democrats to sterner efforts. But while Peter Parley is "patching up" pamphlets, had he not better get up one containing the Hon Daniel Webster's old Tariff and last War speeches? If this would not show a boxing of the political compass, we do not know what could.

In exposing the contemptible designs of this would-be politician, our object is to advertise the democrats in other states, that all the children's books published under the anonymous title of Peter Parley, are "got up" or "brught up," at a penny a page, by S. G. Goodrich, a busy whig trotter; they had better be cautious, therefore, how they introduce them into their families, or they may find those political principles inculcated, which they would have their children taught to despise.

From the Columbian Centinel of June 23, 1824.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHD CITIZENS IN WASHINGTON, Drawn in June, by a Virginia Member of Congress, and exhibited in the Richmond Enquirer,

MR. CRAWFORD. As to the next Presidents, I am fully persuaded, that the nation would be most benefited by the election of Mr Crawford. His opinions coincide with those of our State. MR. ADAMS.

Of Mr Adams I can say but little, my notion of his and his notion of _____ prevented me from knowing much of him, personally—the nation might not do worse, than choose him, were a choice to be made from among those, who have been spoken of; yet as we never contemplated a state of things, which would make it necessary to think of any body but Mr Crawford, I can say but little about the matter.

MESSRS CLAY AND JACKSON. These are politicians well known to all-the nation know how to appreciate them.

(Could any thing be more truly prophetic?)

MR CALHOUN.

I am inclined to think he is more an astronomer than politician—some little time ago General Rumour said he was for re-electing Mr Munroe one other term—then he became the supporter of Mr Adams; last week he was said to be in favor of Jackson-how he is just now, I do not know, as I have not heard for several days-moreover, like the moon, as some astronomers say, his course is always concave to the object around which he revolves.

MR VAN BUREN, A Senator from New York, is, I am inclined to think, among the SOUNDEST REPUBLICANS of the government, and comes NEAREST THE GOOD OLD PRINCIPLES OF 1801. His talents are of the first order, and it is believed, by many, that he will fill the place of Lowndes with as much talent, as much urbanity, more firmness of purpose, and far better opinions of State rights. MR FORSYTH. Mr F. is known to you. He is a man of fine talents, and capable, when he chooses, of appearing among the first-he is modest and rather retiring, but firm and inflexible, and will, the more he is known, increase in reputation and

The Whigs in their Worcester Resolutions use the following language toward the measures of the National Ad-

"Resolved, That above all, in reviewing the measures and policy of General Jackson, we regard, with the most unfeigned and gloomy apprehensions for the permanence of our free institutions, the fatal tendency of HIS WHOLE administration to the unlimited enlargement of Presiden tial Power at the expense of the Powers of Congress and

To this wholesale denunciation of the administration, we choose to let Mr. Webster and Gov. Excrett reply. Mr Webster in his speech to the citizens of Pittsburgh Pa. in July 1833, in alluding to Nullification, held the following language:-

"There were those among us, who wished to break up the government, and scatter the four and twen-ty States into four and twenty sections and fragments .- It was at this moment that the President of the United States (Andrew Jackson) TRUE TO EVERY DUTY, comprehending and fully understanding the case, came forth by his proclamation of the 10th of December, know who know any thing of so humble an individual as myself, upon many important subjects-in relation to internal improvement-re-chartering the United State Bank, perhaps in a degree of domestic protection, and the disposition of our public lands. But when the crisis arrived in which our Constitution was in danger, and when he came forth like a patriotic Chief Magistrate, I for one, taking no counsel but of patriotism, feeling no impulse but the impulse of duty—felt myself bound to yield, not a lame and hesitating, but a cordial and efficient support to his measures.

Governor Everett on the floor of Congress, in 1835, " If Andrew Jackson will so temper his policy as to carry this country honorably through the controversy with-out war, he will draw down upon his head the blessings of men whose voices have never mingled with the incense of his flatterers; and his name in the eyes of all mankind will appear fairer and brighter than when he came out of the blazing lines of New Orleans, in all the freshness of his victory and its honors. Let the President pursue this policy in this temper, and he will carry the people along with him, whatever may beinde—I engage for NEW ENGLAND." President Jackson didcarry the country honorably through the controversy, not a drop of blood was shed, blessings have been drawn down upon his head from men whose voices were unaccustomed to flattery, and New England has gone along with him; but Gov. Everett, who thus engaged for New England, stays behind, and mingles his voice with those, who, in the bitterness of their party feelings, now denounce HIS WHOLE ADMINISTRATION.' The whig leaders may indulge gloomy forebodings of evil from the policy and measures of the national administration, but the people will award a different judgement. The universal prosperity which abounds throughout the county and which has spread with every step of the Administration in throwing off the shack es of a moneyed aristocracy, gives the lie to the charges of the whigs, and shows their fears to be but the creatures of their own creating.

Federal Consistency .- The Atlas, the organ of the panic committee of public safety, affects to have the horrors at the idea of Judge Morton being a candidate for Governor. It soils, it says, the judicial ermine. But then this same federal party nominated Judge Lincoln, and elected him Governor from the very seat now occupied by Judge Morton. They nominated, two years ago, Judge Walker, of Lenox, as candidate for Lieut. Governor; but he being an old school democrat, declined their company; and last year we saw Judge Wilkes Wood, of Middleborough, entering the political arena, and electioneering with all the vulgar fury which characterises the contributors to the Atlas. Verily these fathers of "the solemn protest" labor in their vocation.

83 A very intelligent gentleman of the whig party, a few days since, speaking of the ensuing election, remarked, that, were there any chance for elevating Webster to the Presidency, he should give him his vote, but since a vote for Webster, under present circumstances, would be in substance a vote for Gen. Harrison, who is notoriously incompetent for the office, he should himself vote for Martin Van Buren, who would, in his opinion, support the interests of the country better than either White or Harrison. He added, that there were thousands of voters in Massachasets, of the whig party, who would vote in the same manner for the same reasons.

We The Atlas talks about "snapping collars." We should think that the beasts of burden who dragged Gen. Harrison in a carriage through the streets of Philadelphia, and that Daniel Webster, who has been assigned to not a dissimilar duty in this State, would have snapped their collars; but the real driver, Nick Biddle, knows how strong to make the harness.

An extract for the Editor of the Token .- A sickliness is beginning to degrade our taste in the arts, which eries alond for reformation. The little pictures and little prints, and little poems and little ballads of the day, are my after abhorrence. All is namby pamby, all Tilburina in white satin,-all fiddle-faddle. Every artist, poet, painter, or musician, seizes some spun-sugar idea, wraps it up in snipped paper, with a pretty little motto, as a pretty cadeau for pretty little ladies. When shall we again erect our worship to the noble, the stern, the simple, the vast? When will the savage Rosa dash, or learned Poussin draw? When will Haydn or Handel revive—a Vandyke impart meaning to the human face divine-a Goldsmith or an Inchbald cheat one of genuine tears, or a Ho-Another, of similar amount, drawn and endorsed by the garth preach upon canvass a moral worth a thousand homilies ? A further examination was then made on board the the Centinel & Gazette, and they set their triple headed wits to boat, which had been taken over to Jersey City for the purgether to cook up something smarter; so by dint of pillaging noney could not be found. It was however discovered our original report, and mingling the facts in it with the facts in about 5 o'cl ck yesterday afternoon, but not on board the Monday's report, turning them all heels over head, and parading them tail foremost, with the addition of the original novelty that Mr King kept" a fancy goods store," they made a very se vere story of it, if not a true one. The reward will doubtless be paid to Mr. Smith, had the word "stocks" painted on his door post, but the kind the Engineer, who deserves much credit for the prudence was not specified.
